A gentleman who has been acting in a capacity for the company made the following statement to an Evenino World reporter:

The custom of the Company has been to give the bank inland bills of lading on goods in transit between Baltimore and England, and upon shipment of the goods the inland bills of lading were exchanged for ocean bills of lading.

"The goods then went to the other side and the bank collected on its bills of lading, thus realizing a neat sum by each transaction. These transactions went on for two years, and the bank admits that it had former transactions of this kind.

Somebody movel to adjourn, but Mr. Garaide asked if the boases would not consent to lay the scales off for a week. The manufacturers will again consider this proposition at a special meeting this afternoon.
